

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

A method of determining the relative number of nucleic acid sequences in test cells which provides for a high resolution during comparative genomic hybridization by keeping all components separate from each other and selecting target 5 nucleic acids which have a high resolution capability for determining genomic imbalances in the test cells and which facilitate a screening of the test cells for over- or under-expression of individual genes.

RECORDED IN THE U.S. PATENT AND TRADEMARK OFFICE
ON FEB 22, 1990
BY THE GOVERNMENT FOR PUBLIC USE
IN THE U.S. GOVERNMENT WORKS